Scholarship goal to encourage young architects to study and work in Tasmania

A Launceston-based student who is completing her final year of her Masters in Architecture today was awarded the inaugural Bullock Consulting Scholarship in Architecture.

Elizabeth Davis was awarded $5000 and the opportunity to do 12 weeks' work placement with the company.

Bullock Consulting, a leading local architectural, engineering and surveying company which focuses on sustainable design and development, has joined the University of Tasmania to offer the scholarship to further the education of the next generation of engineers and architects.

Bullock Consulting directors, Chester Bullock, Joel Wallace and David Gillies expressed their desire to ensure that every effort is made to nurture and support local talent.

“We believe it's vital that all Tasmanian businesses should make every effort to foster and encourage young Tasmanians to stay in Tasmania,” Joel Wallace said.

“The University of Tasmania's scholarship program goes a long way to ensure that graduates are given opportunities to do just that.

“We see that providing access to financial assistance and networking and career opportunities is an important aspect of the university experience; it also represents an investment by local companies such as Bullock Consulting into the future.

“Our company has grown consistently since it was established in 1992 and employs a core team of 40 staff in offices throughout Tasmania.

“We are particularly focused on ensuring that we encourage local graduates not only from architecture but also from structural engineering, building services, civil engineering and surveying.”
